GAO reviewed the Department of States excess or underused overseas real estate, focusing on: (1) property that potentially could be sold to provide funds for other real estate needs; (2) States problems in determining which properties to sell; and (3) how State uses proceeds from real estate sales. GAO found that: (1) from 1990 to 1995, State sold 133 million in real estate, which was a small part of its total excess or underused property; (2) State does not have a standard process for identifying and selling excess or underused real estate; (3) in practice, excess or underused property is not identified or sold without the assistance of an embassy; (4) the use of the funds from property sales is the only incentive that the embassies have to identify and sell excess or underused real estate; (5) State does not ensure that the profits from the sale of property go to its most urgent real estate needs worldwide; and (6) the proceeds from the sale of property are generally allowed to be used by the corresponding embassy. This item ships from La Vergne, TN. Paperback.
